The West End School.

While the public school in the West End may be an expensive experiment, there is no doubt but that it has done great good during its brief existence, of which fact one can easily be convinced by dropping in there at any time. When the school was first organized most of the scholars were ragged, unkempt and ignorant, but now they are all tidy in their dress, their faces are clean and bright, they have advanced rapidly in the branches taught, and it is to be regretted that there is a probability of the school being abolished. The city council has refused longer to pay the rent of the house in which it is taught, and the members of the School Board are under the impression that they have no right under the law to expend any part of the fund under their control for the purpose of securing a building in which to hold the school, so it seems that the poor children who have enjoyed the privilege of being taught there will have to go to the school on the South Side or grow up in ignorance. It seems to us that some provision should be made to continue the school, even if it is expensive, as it has been proven that the children in that locality will not go to the South Side and were glad to attend near at home. Education lessens crime, and it is far better for the city to pay a comparatively small sum for improving the minds and making good citizens of the street gamins of to-day than to incur the large expense of taking care of them when they become the criminals of next year, as they surely will if allowed to grow up in ignorance.

The testimonials which the mail brings in every day run thus: "Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup cured the baby of croup." "It cured me of a most distressing cough;" or "it cured my little boy of sore throat." "We could not do without it."
